“The superb results are a fitting tribute to the collecting eye of Edward and Millicent Carew-Shaw, with proceeds from the sale benefiting medical research at The Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Both the pre-sale viewing and the sale itself were extremely well attended as a combination of existing and new collectors, across many different categories, competed for the chance to own work fresh to the market. We were particularly pleased by the Modern British section especially the Augustus John portrait which realised £19,200. Other strong areas were furniture and Chinese and European ceramics. The sale total confirms Christie's dominance of single-owner collections of this type,” said Andrew McVinish, Head of Sale.
