“Today’s sale was a traditional one with property from museum collections and old established collections from every period that very much appealed to a wide range of buyers - included some new faces. It bodes well for the English furniture market and our forthcoming exciting sale in London in July of the contents of Dumfries House that includes the most important collection of Thomas Chippendale furniture ever offered at auction,” said Melissa Gagen, Head of Christie’s European Furniture Department. Today’s sale brings the European Furniture Spring sales total to $15.6 million.
