G. Max Bernheimer, International Department Head, commented, "The results show that participation in the Antiquities sales is truly international with buyers from across the globe vying for the rarest and most significant works. The solid results of the sale confirm that works from all sectors of the market continue to perform well and that Christie's remains the world's leading venue for ancient art at auction. We are particularly pleased that the Roman basalt portrait head of the Emperor Philip the Arab achieved over twice its high estimate." Molly Morse Limmer, Head of Antiquities, New York, added, "Christie's celebrated its 15th annual sale of Ancient Jewelry, which continues to see strong interest year after year. Several lots realized well in excess of their high estimates, perhaps most notably the Scythian gold zoomorphic handle, which achieved $62,500, soaring past the pre-sale estimate of $10,000-15,000. We look forward to the year ahead, with our first sale of 2014 taking place in London on April 2."
