Guillaume Cerutti, Chief Executive Officer, Christie's: "Today's sale sends three important messages for now and for the future: despite a challenging economic environment, the demand for works of art of great quality remains very strong; the market is more global than ever, with significant activity from the Americas but also from Europe and Asia; and innovation and adaptability is key - our clients have embraced our creative presentation and sale format combining live and online experiences."

Alex Rotter, Chairman, 20th and 21st Centuries Department: "Approaching this season, we felt very strongly about making a drastic shift to our auction model to create something completely new and inventive, while also retaining the elements of our marquee auctions that drive the sales of extremely valuable works of art, and from that we created ONE. The strength of today's sale was proof of that concept. Innovation and investment in digital enhancement is the way forward, and we are very proud to be on the forefront of that movement in the global art market."

Giovanna Bertazzoni, Vice Chairman, 20th and 21st Centuries Department, Christie's: "ONE: A Global Sale of the 20th Century was an opportunity for us to transform our traditional live auction experience and bring an international digital community to this format. The Wayne Thiebaud Four Pinball Machines was hotly pursued by an online bidder before selling to our colleague on the phone for a record price, demonstrating that clients will bid competitively on all platforms."
